In World Peace and other 4th-grade achievements, award-winning filmmaker Chris Farina portrays local public school teacher John Hunter in the process of guiding his 2006 class at Venable Elementary through an exercise that he developed called "the World Peace Game."

Over an eight-week period, these nine- and ten-year-old students assume roles as world leaders and respond to an ongoing series of real-world military, economic, and environmental crises.

Hunter is a remarkable teacher who has dedicated his life to teaching children the "work of peace." The film's purpose is to share his example and inspire others to advocate and work toward a more peaceful world.
